RIVER RESCUE

Cap'n Pete, the world-traveling pelican, was following the course of the Amazon River across South America.

"Blimey, it's hot!" he muttered, as he winged his way over the dense region where the river was narrow. "The next village I come to, I'm going to stop and get cleaned up. I could use a cooling bath."

Suddenly the vines thinned out and the river widened below Cap'n Pete.

"Shiver me timbers!" Pete cried happily. "I'll just swoop down and take a dip in the old Amazon itself."

Pete circled the river once; then he began his dive, but a piercing voice stopped him in mid-air.

"Señor Bird!" a brightly colored parrot screeched, flying to Pete's side. "Don't dive into the river; it is full of dangerous man-eating piranha fish! Follow me!"

"Spin my spinnaker! I've heard of those piranha fish, but I was so anxious to take a cool dip that it slipped my mind," Pete shuddered, as the two birds flew into a nearby tree. "I'm sure grateful, Matey! That was a narrow escape for an old salt like me. Cap'n Pete Pelican's the name."

"Think nothing of it, Señor. Everyone living along the Amazon fears the piranha. I am Señor Papagayo," the parrot nodded.

"When you are ready, Señor Cap'n, I would be honored to take you to my place. I live near a pool where you can refresh yourself in safety," the parrot offered.

"Thank you! Let's get started now," the delighted pelican exclaimed.

The two birds soared away together, but they had not gone far when another parrot flew toward them, screeching frantically.

"Papa! Papagayo! Have you seen Little Gayo? He has flown off by himself, and his wings are still not strong enough to carry him very far," the mother parrot wept. "Oh, what shall we do?"

"The river!" Papagayo screeched, streaking off in the direction of the Amazon.

Cap'n Pete Pelican instantly realized the parrots' concern for their young one, for he had just had a narrow escape from the piranha fish himself.

Pete joined the worried parents as they searched for Little Gayo. He scanned the horizon along the murky waters of the Amazon River. His eyes, accustomed to searching across rolling ocean waves, soon spotted a small colorful object in the distance. It seemed to be hanging in mid-air above the great river.

Pete flew nearer, and soon he saw that it was a little parrot, whose small wings were fluttering and flapping desperately.

"Avast, Matey! Don't give up the ship," Cap'n Pete called out. "Cap'n Pete has set sail and is heading for the rescue."

Pete flew in low, skimming the surface of the water. His great wings carried him straight below the falling baby parrot. He opened his bill just in time, and the baby bird fell safely into its ample space.

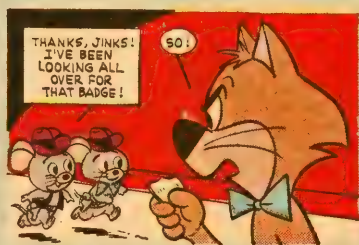

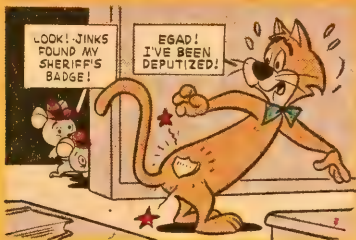

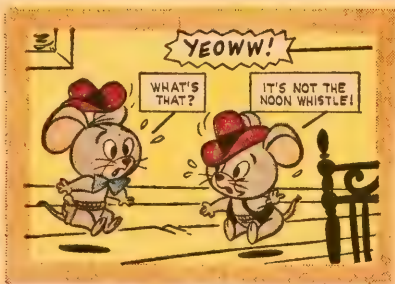

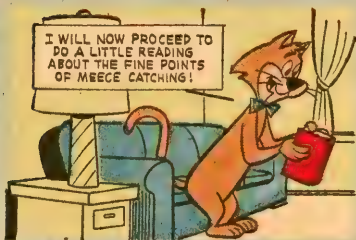

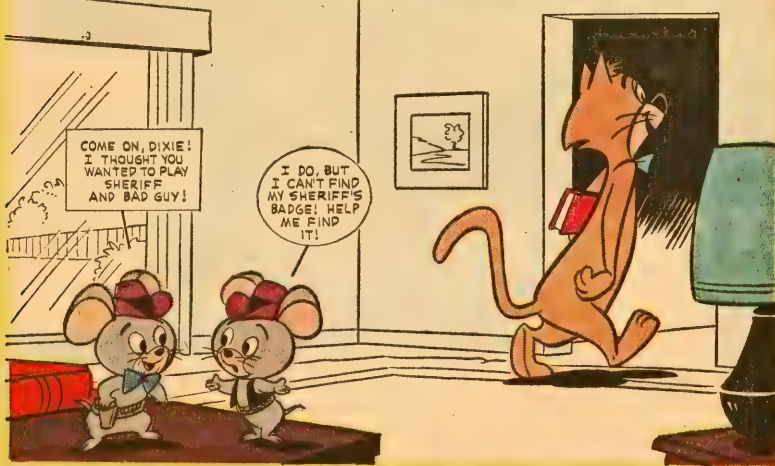

Then Pete flew to the shore, gently carrying his passenger, Little Gayo.

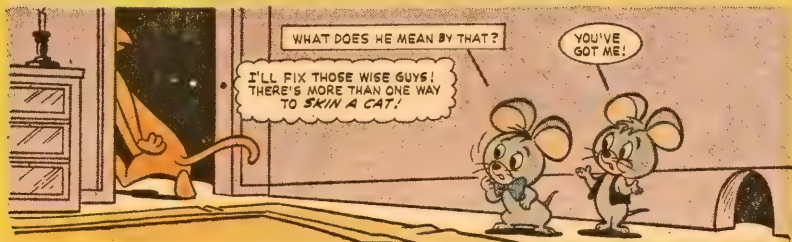

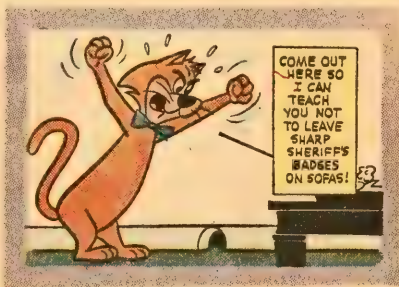

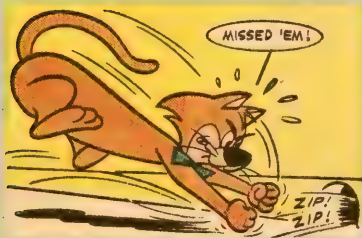

"Oh, Señor Cap'n! Think what would have happened if you had not been here today!" Papagayo cried gratefully.

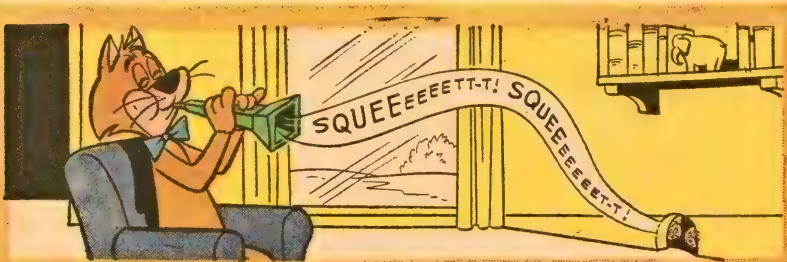

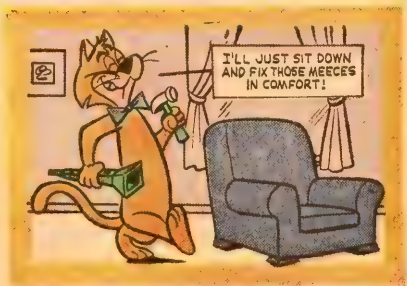

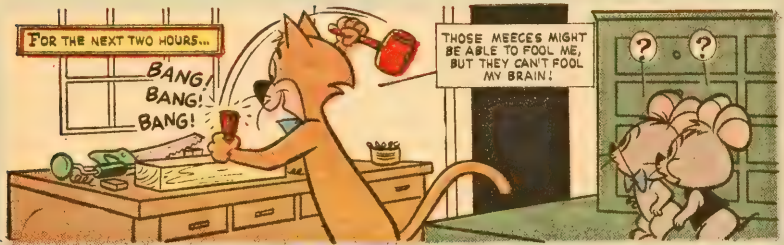

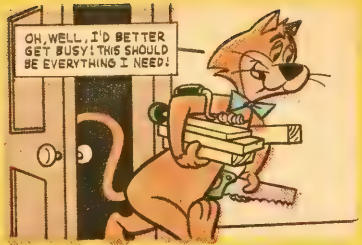

"Well, Matey, I sure wouldn't have been here at all if you had not saved me from the piranha fish in the river a short time ago," Pete grinned modestly.

MADE THE MISTAKE OF OPENING IT!

"THE BAD GENIE SWOOSHED OUT OF HIS ABBRA...

TOO LATE!

"AND BEFORE I COULD SAY HOCUS-POCUS, HE

"HE NEXT TOOK OVER MY CASTLE, AND I WAS POWERLESS TO STOP HIM!"

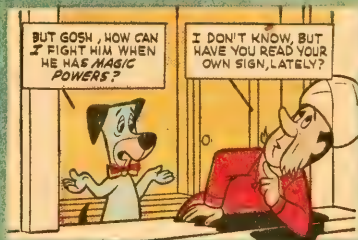

IN FACT, IF HE HADN'T DISCARDED THIS OLD, TATTERED FLYING CARPET WHEN HE CLEANED OUT MY GARAGE, I WOULDN'T HAVE BEEN ABLE TO COME HERE FOR HELP!

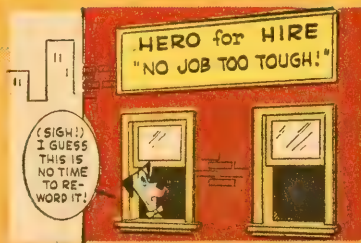

BUT GOSH, HOW CAN I FIGHT HIM WHEN HE HAS MAGIC POWERS?

I DON'T KNOW, BUT HAVE YOU READ YOUR OWN SIGN, LATELY?

HERO for HIRE
"NO JOB TOO TOUGH!"

BIG HOOT'S RUSE

"I'm going out to look for some food," Big Hoot said to his son, Little Hoot, "but I will be back very soon."

"May I go with you this time?" begged the little owl.

"I'm afraid not, Son," replied Big Hoot. "You are still too young to fly."

"But how can I ever learn to be as smart as you are, if I can't watch you?" asked Little Hoot.

"You can watch other animals," explained Big Hoot. "If you study them closely, you will learn many things from them."

Big Hoot warned his son to stay close to home, and then he flew away. Little Hoot was very discouraged, and he walked toward the forest to think. He was careful not to wander too far from his home.

"Owls are the smartest creatures in the forest, so what can I learn from someone who is not as smart as I am?" Little Hoot asked himself, as he sat down in a clearing to consider his problem further.

"Even if I can't fly, I can take care of myself," he thought. "If I could prove that to my father, he'd let me go with him next time. I am sure."

While Little Hoot sat dreaming of the day he could go hunting, he was being watched by a pair of gleaming eyes. It was a very wicked fox, who was planning to make Little Hoot his next meal.

A rabbit saw the fox, and he hurriedly dashed for the safety of his hole. Then, he stuck his head out of his hole and yelled a warning.

"Look out, Little Hoot!" he shouted.

"Look out for what?" questioned Little Hoot, who was startled by the rabbit.

"Look out for me!" growled the fox, as he leaped from behind a tree.

Little Hoot was only a few yards from the safety of his home, but the fox was standing directly in his path and blocking Little Hoot's escape. Little Hoot ran to the only nearby shelter, which was just a very small, scrawny bush.

"That little bush may slow me down," the wicked fox grinned, "but it won't stop me from catching you!"

Just then, Little Hoot heard the voice of Big Hoot coming from the woods across the clearing.

"Help me! Help me!" cried Big Hoot. "I have a broken wing, and I can't fly."

Big Hoot stumbled into the clearing with his right wing dragging behind him. Then he collapsed to the ground.

"Why should I bother with a little owl, when I can have a big owl instead?" grinned the greedy fox.

The fox dashed across the clearing toward Big Hoot; but before the fox could catch him, Big Hoot quickly flew away.

"Run home, Son," Big Hoot called out; and that is exactly what Little Hoot did.

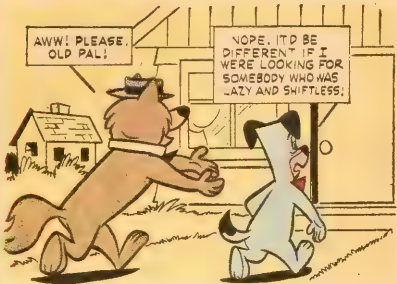

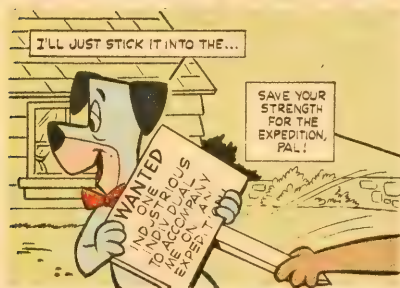

"I only pretended to be hurt to give you the chance to get away," Big Hoot explained later. "You were in real danger, Son."

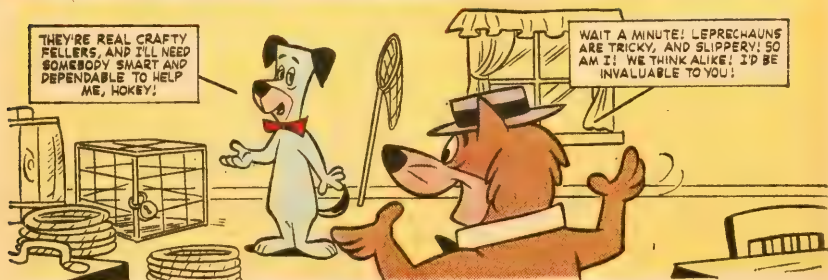

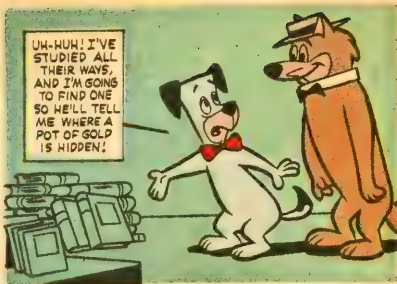

"Only a smart owl like you could have thought of that!" boasted Little Hoot.

"No, many animals use that trick to protect their young ones," smiled Big Hoot. "I learned it from watching them."

"I'm going to start watching animals," exclaimed Little Hoot. "And watching out for some of them, too... especially for any mean fox who is hiding in the bushes."
